HENDERLITER HOUSE
Corner Second and Cumberland Avenue
Little Rock, Pulaski County
Arkansas

HISTORICAL NOTES:

Corner 2nd and Cumberland Streets, Little Rock,
Pulaski County, Arkansas.

Originally built about 1830 by Jesse Henderliter, a German, as store and home; sold to Thomas Thorn, one of the contractors of the new State House. Historically important as the meeting place of the last Territorial Legislature in October 1835. Also, was the place for temporary confinement of John Wilson, Speaker of the House of Representatives during Legislative Session of 1837, who killed J. J. Anthony, a member from Randolph County, in open Session. (Report of the Ark. History Commission, Vol 1 - pp 286).

Built of logs covered with siding and wood shingle roof. In a rather run down condition; owned by the Keith Estate and building has been promised to Daughters of the Confederacy upon disposal; now occupied by ^ANegro resturant.

See Publications of Arkansas Historical Association, vol. 1, p. 286.
